Everyone's vote matters and should be counted. We must ensure every vote is authentic, timely, and legal. I'm concerned about the ballot-counting patterns that lack transparency and accountability. It's inexcusable for ballot-counting locations to exclude Republican observers.

Elections must be held freely and fairly, including the counting of every ballot cast legally under each state's election laws. The process in many states, Nebraska included, has seemingly been conducted efficiently, orderly, transparently and according to the law. In some states and local jurisdictions important questions have been raised about the integrity of the election process. Any evidence of impropriety must be taken seriously and fully investigated to determine if they are legitimate and if they are widespread enough to impact the reported results.

Election security and the integrity of the vote is vital to democracy.

Like many Nebraskans, I am deeply concerned about the election process in other states. This wasn't a typical election — jurisdictions nationwide adjusted their procedures due to the pandemic. While many, including Nebraska, ably conducted their elections in a COVID-safe manner which honored the rule of law and maintained confidence in the integrity of the process, others frankly did not.

I support efforts to identify irregularities, demand transparency, and ensure the results of the Presidential election are based on legally-cast ballots. Actual legal votes cast during the election period determine winners and losers. I don't condone the artificial manufacturing of an election outcome by any candidate, committee, or third party regardless of their political affiliation.

Challenging the results of the Electoral College vote is nothing new. The most recent example was just four years ago when Electoral College votes from the November 2016 election between Donald J. Trump and Hillary Clinton were tallied in a joint session of Congress and nearly a dozen challenges were put forward by Democrats.

This week the checks and balances built into our system will allow the opportunity to object to electoral votes from states where voting procedures and adjustments to those procedures were at best highly questionable and at worst threaten to undermine our Republic. Nebraskans in the Third District overwhelmingly supported President Trump in November, and they deserve to see Congress have that debate. I plan to support motions to object.

Video: “I am disappointed that irregularities—and I think it’s agreed upon that there has been at least a level of fraud, but yet nothing happens with it. And that should be a concern to all of us moving forward.”

Nebraskans deserve to know the election was conducted fairly, within the letter of the law. I sat down with @NTVNews to discuss why I will support objections to the upcoming Electoral College certification on Wednesday. Watch the interview here:

Rep. Smith says he will raise objection over Electoral College results

Congressman Adrian Smith said he will raise his objection to the Electoral College results this week. “There are just some things that need some discussion. I don’t ...
